The word Ushabti—which may be translated “The Answerer”—is the name given to a small figure found in tombs, and supposed to fulfil the duties incumbent on the deceased in the future world which he was either unable or unwilling to do himself.

When called to life in the Fields of the Blessed, by Osiris, the deceased found that he had to perform the labors of cultivating the land, tilling, etc.; and as the rich had in life never performed manual labor and disliked the idea of doing so in the next world, the priests thought out the scheme of making these little figures, who at the manufacture, having magical formula said over them, were thenceforth endowed with life, to answer the duties of those who could afford to purchase them. The same idea was carried out in other occupations—little models of boats were buried with the corpse to enable him to embark on water, figures of domestics to do the domestic duties; and whenever the name of the departed was called by Osiris, if the duties were not pleasant, the “Ushabti” answered for him. In the earlier dynasties only the rich could afford them, but later they became a regular article of merchandise, selling at varying prices, according to their make.
